3-Hour Live Event

Thursday, November 12, 2020

9:00 am CST / 10:00 am EST

As you know, this year has presented employers, and the entire world, a new set of challenges that none of us have encountered before. Things are changing so rapidly that employers have not only been forced to adjust to circumstances quickly but are continuing to deal with new pressures. It is imperative that we, as employers, managers, and HR professionals, keep up with the latest changes in the law.

Earlier this year, in the interest of keeping our attendees safe, we regretfully decided to cancel our annual Labor and Employment Law Conference. Our past attendees know that we have held our annual Labor and Employment Law Conference for 40 years. Certainly, we will miss the interaction and fun that our annual Conference usually brings. However, given the effects of the coronavirus and the related health issues, we felt that it was impossible to have our normal Conference in the middle of a pandemic. Despite being forced to break our forty-year tradition, we still want to reach out to you in some way and get to you the information that you need to keep moving forward.

In conjunction with Western Governors University, we have planned a teleconference/webinar at the time that we would normally have our fall Conference. Our webinar will be three hours long. Attendees will receive HRCI and/or SHRM credit for the attendance. The focus of our presentations will be the pandemic and its impact for employers and HR managers. Our three-hour program will cover such COVID-19 related topics as Workers' Compensation, Working Remotely, Reduction in Force, and other issues.
